
Contents

Introduction	vii
Chapter 1. How Can We Study Environmental Policies?	1
1.1. Interests and limits of an approach to the environment through policy instruments	2
1.2. Defining the environment	6
1.3. Perception of environmental forms and motives	8
1.4. Perception of institutions in the environment	15
1.5. Emerging environmental policy issues	20
Chapter 2. Politicization and Institutionalization of the Environment	23
2.1. Environmental motives between singularity and generality	23
2.2. Putting motives into politics by greening	26
2.3. Frames of environmental forms: the contributions of political ecology	31
2.4. Stabilization of patterns by co-production	41
2.5. A framework for analyzing the politics of environmental motives	43
Chapter 3. Stabilized Motives of Freshwater Quality Control in Europe	49
3.1. The environmental motives of freshwater control policy	50
3.1.1. Self-purification and the sacrificed river, motives for authorizing polluting discharges	53
3.1.2. Fish mortality, a conservative motive for banning pollution	59

3.1.3. Trout, an ambiguous motive between liberalism and nationalism	65
3.1.4. Migratory fish as a motive for banning dams	70
3.1.5. Eutrophication, a European motive	75
3.2. Use of environmental motives in political work	79
3.2.1. Adjustment of political work to the consistency of the environmental motives of the water police	81
3.2.2. Plurality of ontologies of environmental motives in water policing	82
3.2.3. Modalities for implementing the environmental motives of the water quality control in politics	85
Chapter 4. Motives Under Discussion in Two Water Agencies	89
4.1. The water agencies model	92
4.2. Two water agencies as reflected by their institutional and environmental motives	99
4.2.1. Policy divisions between Seine-Normandie and Rhône-Méditerranée and Corse	100
4.2.2. Containment or generalization of the motive for cash flow constraint	103
4.2.3. The crystallization of the Rhône River motive	109
4.2.4. The politicization of the Paris conurbation's motive	113
4.3. Use of motives in political work in both agencies	117
Chapter 5. Motives for Anticipating the Ecological Crisis	123
5.1. The theory of ecological modernization and its motives	124
5.2. The forum for political ideas on the ecological crisis	130
5.2.1. Mapping of the intellectual forum in sociology and political science on the ecological crisis	131
5.2.2. Forum dynamics	134
5.3. The Anthropocene motive	137
Conclusion	143
References	159
Index	185