

Contents

Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction	xv
Kevin DITER and Claude MARTIN
Part 1. Well-being and Ill-being from Public Policies' Perspectives	1
Chapter 1. The Impact of a “Crisis” of Well-being on Goals and Practices in the British Educational System	3
Kathryn ECCLESTONE
1.1. Introduction.	3
1.2. The cultural turn toward psychological vulnerability	6
1.2.1. An unprecedented crisis?	6
1.2.2. Therapeutic cultural narratives	9
1.2.3. The cultural turn to psychological “vulnerability”.	11
1.3. Changing the human and curriculum subject of education	13
1.3.1. Approaches to well-being	13
1.3.2. Concept creep	15
1.4. Problems with the evidence-base	18
1.4.1. Evaluations of policy-led well-being initiatives in British schools	18
1.4.2. Weak concepts and measures	18

1.5. Educational alternatives to well-being	20
1.6. Conclusion	22
1.7. References	23
Chapter 2. New Zealand: Educational Inequality in a High-performing System	31
Grant DUNCAN
2.1. Well-being	32
2.2. Well-being and schools	37
2.3. New Zealand: A brief history	39
2.4. The contemporary scene	40
2.5. “Te Kotahitanga”	44
2.6. The Covid-19 pandemic	47
2.7. Conclusion	48
2.8. References	50
Chapter 3. Is Early Childhood Education Part of the Solution to Inequalities, or is it Part of the Problem?	55
Michel VANDENBROECK
3.1. Introduction: from outcomes to opportunities.	55
3.2. Quality and beyond	58
3.3. Moderate quality.	61
3.4. Unequal access.	63
3.5. Discussion: a remarkable paradox	65
3.6. References	66
Part 2. Family–School Relationships and Children’s Well-being	73
Chapter 4. The Conditions for Effective Parental Involvement at School.	75
Sandrine GARCIA
4.1. Families who anticipate difficulties.	78
4.2. Problem-solving families.	81
4.3. Powerless families.	84
4.4. Conclusion	87
4.5. References	88

Chapter 5. School, Peers and Parental Expectations: Understanding “Ill-being” at School	91
Agnès GRIMAUULT-LEPRINCE, Lila LE TRIVIDIC-HARRACHE and Rozenn NEDELEC
5.1. Survey method	94
5.2. Areas of differentiation in subjective school experience	95
5.3. Characterizing student experience profiles	98
5.4. Difficulty at school and perceived family expectations of schooling . .	101
5.5. School ill-being and the configuration of social bonds	102
5.6. Conclusion	106
5.7. References	107
5.7. Appendices	110
Chapter 6. “Well-being” in Harmony with “Performance”: Understanding Parental Choice of Montessori Private Schooling	117
Ghislain LEROY and Julie PINSOLLE
6.1. Introduction.	117
6.2. Understanding parental rejection of “mainstream” schools.	119
6.2.1. The broken arm, the mammoth, and the mold	119
6.2.2. Parents in search of a “personalized” learning experience	122
6.2.3. Recent changes in state schools and society	123
6.3. Understanding the refusal of “mainstream” schools	124
6.3.1. Parent–teacher relations	124
6.3.2. Beyond pedagogical personalization: welcoming the child as a whole person	125
6.3.3. The Montessori community and difference.	127
6.4. What kind of individualization are Montessorian parents looking for their children?	128
6.4.1. Personalized education at home	129
6.4.2. The mother at the service of the individual child	130
6.4.3. Socializing to achieve autonomy and hidden childhood constraints.	132
6.5. Conclusion: interpreting the relationship between “well-being” and performance in early childhood	134
6.6. References	136

Part 3. School Climate and Children's Well-being at School 139
Chapter 7. Unequal Impact of School-related Factors on Low Levels of Subjective Well-being Among Students in France, the UK and Portugal 141

Kevin DITER and Claude MARTIN

7.1. Introduction: from well-being to ill-being and back again	141
7.1.1. Understanding well-being: from a negative to a positive definition	141
7.1.2. Role of school climate in determining the level of children's SWB	143
7.1.3. From the determinants of well-being to the determinants of ill-being: the contribution of comparison	144
7.2. Data and methods	145
7.2.1. The PISA 2015 Survey.	145
7.2.2. Students' level of SWB and its main determinants	146
7.2.3. Methodology: why use stratified (multilevel) analyses?	149
7.3. Findings	150
7.3.1. Low level of well-being unequally distributed depending on the country	150
7.3.2. Low level of well-being unequally distributed according to gender and social class	152
7.3.3. The central role of school-based factors, and in particular stress related to performance	155
7.3.4. School-related factors have different impacts depending on the country	157
7.3.5. School-related factors have different impacts depending on social class	162
7.3.6. Different school determinants depending on social class and geography	164
7.4. Discussion	165
7.5. Conclusion	169
7.6. References	170
7.7. Appendices	175

Chapter 8. Building Stronger Student–Teacher Relationships to Improve Youth Opportunities and Well-being	177
Maia CUCCHIARA
8.1. Key terms and concepts	179
8.2. Why STRs matter	181
8.3. Group variations in STRs	184
8.4. Improving STRs, enhancing opportunities and well-being	186
8.4.1. Teachers’ practices	186
8.4.2. School-level practices	189
8.4.3. Organizational structures	190
8.5. Putting relationships first.	191
8.6. Conclusion	192
8.7. References	193
Chapter 9. Trends in Teenage Mental Health and Well-being: Parents, Peers and Poverty Shame	199
Dimitra HARTAS
9.1. Introduction.	199
9.2. Measure	202
9.2.1. Background	203
9.2.2. Parent–young person communication	203
9.2.3. Peer interactions – bullying	204
9.2.4. Poverty shame	204
9.2.5. Well-being and mental health	204
9.3. Discussion of findings and conclusions	206
9.3.1. Parents, peers and young people’s well-being	206
9.3.2. Girls’ and young women’s well-being: a sign of gender inequality?	208
9.3.3. Moving into a precarious adulthood	210
9.3.4. Poverty shame and well-being: a social rather than an individual malaise	211
9.4. Final thoughts	213
9.5. References	214
9.6. Appendix	217
9.6.1. Data analytic plan.	217
9.6.2. Gender and age analyses for 10- to 15-year-olds	217
9.6.3. Gender and age analyses for 16- to 21-year-olds	218
9.6.4. All regression models were strong and fitted the data well	219

Part 4. Well-being and Ill-being from Children’s Perspectives 223
Chapter 10. Well-being, Recognition and Participation:
The Challenge for Schools 225

Nigel Patrick THOMAS

10.1. Introduction	225
10.2. “Improving approaches to well-being in schools: What role does recognition play?”	226
10.2.1. Context and theoretical framing.	227
10.2.2. Methods employed	229
10.2.3. Results of policy analysis	230
10.2.4. Results of focus groups and interviews	232
10.2.5. Results of online survey	235
10.2.6. Learning from the well-being research.	237
10.3. “Improving well-being through student participation at school”	237
10.3.1. Aims and methods.	238
10.3.2. Delivery and key findings	239
10.3.3. Theoretical and practical implications of the research.	244
10.4. Acknowledgments	246
10.5. References.	246

Chapter 11. Re-imagining Schooling from the Perspectives of Marginalized Children and Young People: Balancing Children’s Rights and Rights Claims Alongside the Expectations of Parents and Governments 251

Cath LARKINS

11.1. Introduction	251
11.2. Context.	253
11.2.1. Understanding education, well-being and citizenship from children’s perspectives.	253
11.2.2. The background studies	257
11.3. Marginalized children and young people’s aspirations for well-being in education	260
11.3.1. Peer relationships	260
11.3.2. Enough supportive teaching staff	261
11.3.3. Respect for ethnic and cultural diversity.	263
11.3.4. Punishment and privacy	264

11.3.5. Learning opportunities and assessment	265
11.3.6. Participation?	267
11.4. Some conclusions	269
11.5. References.	270
List of Authors	275
Index	277