
Contents

Preface	xi
Introduction	xiii
Chapter 1. For a New Strategic and Competitive Intelligence	1
1.1. Our assessment	1
1.2. The present day	4
1.3. Tomorrow	7
1.4. Conclusion	10
1.5. References	10
Chapter 2. Geopolitics and Strategic Intelligence	15
2.1. Principles of analysis	15
2.1.1. Getting to the point	15
2.1.2. Having an open mind	17
2.1.3. Knowing how to decode information	18
2.1.4. Learning how to sort through information	19
2.2. The evolving world	20
2.2.1. The increasing power of the individual	21
2.2.2. The evolution of power relationships	22
2.3. A changing world	29
2.3.1. International institutions	29
2.3.2. Bilateral agreements	30
2.4. Increased risks	30
2.4.1. Climate risks	30
2.4.2. Risks linked to resources	31
2.4.3. Medical risks	31
2.4.4. Natural risks	32

2.4.5. Political risks	32
2.4.6. Nuclear risks.	33
2.4.7. Cyber risks.	33
2.5. Conclusion	34
2.6. References	34
Chapter 3. Competitive Intelligence Schools Across the World: Foundations, Influence and Perspectives	39
3.1. Introduction: what is the competitive intelligence school?	39
3.2. Visions that inspire schools of thought.	42
3.2.1. “Power countries”	43
3.2.2. “Emerging countries”	45
3.3. The advent of the competitive intelligence schools	49
3.3.1. Geopolitical and geoeconomic framework	49
3.3.2. Doctrines	51
3.4. The “nourishing disciplines” of competitive intelligence and communities of public/private practice.	63
3.4.1. Disciplines and “schools of practice”	64
3.4.2. The African and Chinese schools of competitive intelligence.	66
3.5. Conclusion	77
3.6. References	78
Chapter 4. Competitive Intelligence as a Vehicle for International Collaboration	85
4.1. The arrival of new signs	85
4.1.1. Definitions of competitive intelligence	85
4.1.2. Maintaining competitive advantages	86
4.2. Increasing instability	87
4.2.1. More developed countries.	87
4.2.2. Low-income countries	87
4.3. The French example.	88
4.4. Collaboration.	89
4.4.1. The foundations of collaboration.	89
4.4.2. Academic collaboration	90
4.4.3. Bilateral network collaborations	91
4.4.4. Collaboration between organizations	96
4.4.5. Collaborations through international institutions	98
4.4.6. Collaboration via chambers of commerce and industry	100
4.5. Conclusion	101
4.6. References	101

Chapter 5. Regional Competitive Intelligence	105
5.1. What do we mean by territories?	106
5.1.1. Regional and international patterns of economic development and innovation	107
5.1.2. Intelligent specialization strategies	108
5.2. A typology of territories	109
5.3. Definition of territorial intelligence.	110
5.4. The challenges of territorial intelligence.	112
5.5. Rethinking our intelligence capabilities in territorial situations	115
5.5.1. Strategic coordination deficits	115
5.5.2. Needing to be organized.	115
5.6. The intelligence of situations	117
5.6.1. The establishment of competitive and strategic regional facilities.	118
5.6.2. The goals of these facilities	118
5.7. The main areas of intervention of this competitive intelligence and regional strategic facility or organization	119
5.8. The generic configuration of the facility.	120
5.8.1. Regional strategic steering group (CRPS)	120
5.8.2. The interpretational group.	120
5.8.3. The spotters	120
5.9. Strategic management approach: mapping and analysis tools	121
5.9.1. The map of key territory actors.	121
5.9.2. Critical resources of a territory	122
5.9.3. The influence potential of a territory	122
5.10. Operational implementation	123
5.11. Conclusion	124
5.12. References.	124
Chapter 6. Influence	127
6.1. The current foundations of influence.	127
6.2. Who is going to communicate?	129
6.3. Knowledge of the target and information	130
6.4. Rumors	131
6.5. The “media sounding board”	132
6.6. Cultural or public diplomacy	135
6.7. Positive influence	136
6.7.1. Influence, rumors and territorial attractiveness	136
6.7.2. Becoming attractive	137
6.8. Conclusion	138
6.9. References	139

Chapter 7. Sphere of Influence	145
7.1. The return of geopolitics in the economic field.	146
7.2. Power strategy and influence strategy	147
7.2.1. States	148
7.2.2. Companies	149
7.3. The sphere of influence: illustrations.	151
7.3.1. Definitions	151
7.3.2. The sphere of influence of a company.	154
7.3.3. The sphere of influence of a territory	156
7.4. Conclusion	159
7.5. Bibliography	160
Chapter 8. Organizational Intelligence	163
8.1. Definition	164
8.2. Organizational intelligence and cognitive pathologies	165
8.2.1. The brakes of the organization	165
8.2.2. Corporate culture: both a brake and lever of organizational intelligence	165
8.3. An example: the US–Japan FSX Fighter program or “thinking out of the silos”.	168
8.4. Organizational intelligence and strategies	170
8.4.1. Networks	171
8.4.2. Agile organizations	172
8.4.3. A network of experts	173
8.4.4. The culture of organizations: management of cognitive biases and vehicle for the creation of a knowledge base of the environment	174
8.4.5. Managing the culture of organizations	175
8.4.6. Learning organization	176
8.5. Collective intelligence and organization of sensor networks	176
8.6. Conclusion	178
8.7. References	179
Chapter 9. From Military Intelligence to Competitive Intelligence	181
9.1. From the military to the economy.	181
9.1.1. Military warfare.	181
9.1.2. Integration of the economy	182
9.1.3. The priority of the economy	183
9.1.4. The economic army	183
9.2. Forms and aims of intelligence	184

9.2.1. The importance of intelligence	184
9.2.2. Economic intelligence	185
9.2.3. Global intelligence	186
9.2.4. Intelligence as global tool	186
9.3. The practice of intelligence	188
9.3.1. Intelligence for everyone	188
9.3.2. Weak and strong signals	189
9.3.3. The tools of intelligence	190
9.3.4. Sources of intelligence	191
9.3.5. Public/private collaboration in company intelligence	192
9.4. Intelligence and its cycle	193
9.4.1. Decoding what we might notice to understand reality	193
9.4.2. The intelligence cycle	196
9.4.3. Knowing oneself	197
9.4.4. Definition of the research framework	197
9.4.5. Prospective vision	197
9.4.6. The research plan	198
9.4.7. Collecting data	199
9.4.8. Data cross-checking	200
9.5. Analysis	200
9.6. The synthesis of information and its dissemination	201
9.6.1. From adequacy to expectations	202
9.7. Conclusion	202
9.8. References	204
Conclusion	207
Index	213
Summary of Contents of Volume 2	217