
Contents

Foreword by Marc Luyckx Ghisi	xi
Foreword by Éric Seulliet	xv
Preface	xvii
Part 1. The Driving Facts of Change	1
Introduction to Part 1	3
Chapter 1. Adapt or Dare?	5
1.1. Accepting to evolve	5
1.1.1. For a shared Europe.	5
1.1.2. For a real respect of Gaia’s internal rules.	6
1.1.3. Saving the planet, jobs or our civilization?	8
1.1.4. Going through “a good war”?	10
1.1.5. Expanding our field of certainty	11
1.2. Change seen from afar to better understand it.	13
1.2.1. Being an actor in our own novel.	13
1.2.2. The cybernetic futurology approach.	14
1.2.3. The temporality of civilizations	16
1.3. Known risks of our model	19
1.3.1. No tolerance thresholds.	19
1.3.2. A specific model for each geopolitical zone	21
1.3.3. From the Anthropocene to the symbiotic, an opportunity for Europe	23
1.3.4. Solzhenitsyn syndrome	24
1.4. Better than a revolution	28

Chapter 2. Our Heritage of Experience Tested by New Knowledge	31
2.1. The common good as a new source of prosperity.	31
2.1.1. “Employment and GDP”: words of the 21st century.	32
2.1.2. An inclusive model by necessity.	33
2.1.3. On the 21st floor, take the cultural elevator	34
2.1.4. Care of our idiom/logobiota	35
2.1.5. The economy between cooperation and competitiveness	39
2.1.6. The consequences of this development	42
2.1.7. Breaking out of the dictatorship of short term	52
2.2. Liberating values.	53
2.2.1. No longer possessing, but disposing	53
2.2.2. From consumerism to the search for cooperation	56
2.2.3. Complementarity, the wealth of the community	58
2.2.4. Educating for cooperation	59
2.2.5. Organization: from the pyramid to the organic structure	65
2.3. Respect for life course.	68
2.3.1. The continuity of love and knowledge	68
2.3.2. The times of life from the 20th to the 21st centuries.	69
Chapter 3. The Change of Era Beyond Our Will!	73
3.1. This new era: symbiotic or chaotic?	73
3.1.1. Overcoming the right/left duality	73
3.1.2. Revisiting the institutions	74
3.1.3. The energy of revolt	76
3.1.4. The time of think tanks.	78
3.1.5. Towards male/female complementarity.	79
3.1.6. Learning transparency in a fuzzy universe	80
3.2. AI, the eye of Cain and democratic benevolence	80
3.3. Sovereignty in the 21st century.	82
3.3.1. The layers of power.	82
3.3.2. Power through data	83
Chapter 4. The Traces of Our Future Inscribed in Our Past	85
4.1. Controlling your destiny	85
4.1.1. The invention of the image.	85
4.1.2. Smart, but fragile	85
4.1.3. Not above the laws of nature.	87
4.2. Creative and responsible	88
4.2.1. The homeostasis of our democracy	88
4.2.2. Europe: hierarchical with its kings, but organic with its communities	90
4.2.3. Towards a cooperative democracy	91
4.2.4. No more ideology.	93

4.2.5. Escaping the clutches of massive influence.	94
4.2.6. Neither colonizer nor colonized, only responsible and competitive	98
4.3. World view and transmission of knowledge.	99
4.4. Europe, a civilization in reconstruction?.	100
4.4.1. At the forefront of the need for renewal.	100
4.4.2. Taking into account social creatives.	102
4.4.3. Preparing for change with the right tools	109
4.4.4. The dangers of a collapse of the West.	111
4.5. More technology, therefore more humanity	115
4.5.1. Towards a new form of governance	115
4.5.2. Making society now	116
4.5.3. The end of one model, the beginning of another	118
4.5.4. No global without local.	119
4.5.5. Demography, a taboo subject	124
4.6. Digital technology, a weapon but also a tool	129
4.6.1. Digitized financial warfare.	129
4.6.2. Influencer wars	131
4.7. Workaholics forever?	133
4.7.1. Before sedentarization: to each his own tribe.	133
4.7.2. Since sedentarization: a place for submission	133
4.8. Sedentarization, spiritual at first	134
Chapter 5. “To Make Society” Therefore “To Exchange”	137
5.1. Exchanges and specializations	137
5.1.1. The end of the fear of missing out?	137
5.1.2. Strengths and weaknesses of the concept of ownership	139
5.1.3. Beginning and end of patriarchy?	142
5.1.4. Exchanging to prosper	142
5.2. Financial instruments over time	143
5.2.1. Symbols to record exchanges	143
5.2.2. Money and financiers.	144
5.2.3. Church/State and social classes	147
5.2.4. End of social classes?.	148
Part 2. Avenues to be Explored	149
Introduction to Part 2	151
Chapter 6. The Inevitable Reworking of the Social Pact	153
6.1. The world of work in revolution	153
6.1.1. Fewer and better educated citizens	153
6.1.2. Collapse of the middle class	154

6.2. Occupation/job and skills/talents/knowledge	159
6.2.1. Rise of competence	159
6.2.2. Disappearance of professions and knowledge strategy	159
6.2.3. Emergence of jobs and networks	160
6.3. End of the Jules Ferry school of thought.	161
6.3.1. Certification courses	162
6.3.2. Sloping entry and exit from the labor market, an avenue to be explored	163
6.3.3. Inspirational heroes.	163
6.3.4. Regulated professions with regulated missions	163
Chapter 7. New Reward Tools	165
7.1. The end of liberalist doxa in favor of reciprocity	165
7.2. Shifting the focus between private property and the commons	166
7.2.1. Dependence on the productive and the common good.	166
7.2.2. The dual economy: productive and contributory.	167
7.2.3. Basic income: yes, but.	169
Chapter 8. Smart Currencies	173
8.1. Institutional money and contributory money	173
8.2. Monetary biodiversity.	175
8.2.1. Currency diversity as a source of stability	175
8.2.2. Incentive money: recurrent and melting	177
8.2.3. Already smart currencies.	178
8.3. Moving to the sandbox	179
8.3.1. Responding to the collapse of the middle class.	179
8.3.2. Objectives of the multicurrency experiments.	181
8.3.3. Urgency?.	181
8.4. Do not deny the history of our currency	182
8.4.1. From melting money to mortgage credit	182
8.4.2. Central banks	185
8.4.3. The financing of industry.	186
8.4.4. Conquering finance.	188
8.4.5. End of a certain finance	191
8.4.6. Pressure, depression, renewal	192
8.4.7. The dangers of “helicopter currencies”	193

Chapter 9. The New Priorities	195
9.1. Return of feminine values	195
9.2. A different relationship to innovation	196
9.3. Preparing for the “aftermath” of transnational corporations	198
9.4. Going digital 0.0	199
9.5. Data as important as money	200
9.6. A renewed idea of liberalism	201
Chapter 10. Transition Without Chaos?	207
10.1. More complicated than sedentarization	207
10.2. A global but differentiated shift	208
10.2.1. Alternately at the forefront of human history	208
10.2.2. Europe at the forefront of the societal shift	208
10.3. Productive-contributory: Siamese economies	209
10.3.1. Civilization’s stampede	209
10.3.2. From the “middle” to the “active” class	210
10.3.3. Towards higher levels of satisfaction	212
10.3.4. Economy at the service of people and the common good	214
10.3.5. Democratic coordination	215
10.4. Tasks dedicated to the common good	217
10.4.1. The different contributory tasks	217
10.4.2. Empathic tasks	226
10.4.3. Status of contributory and empathic tasks	230
10.4.4. All citizens and actors of the economic and social life	231
Chapter 11. No Societal Transformation Without Digital Sovereignty	233
11.1. Protecting land, but also souls and knowledge	233
11.2. The European opportunity	234
11.3. Data as important as money	235
11.4. The European digital age of the 21st century	236
11.4.1. A place for Rina	236
11.4.2. Platforms and the platform State	237
11.4.3. The time of digital castles	243
11.4.4. Providing the means	243

Conclusion	245
References	255
Index	259