
Contents

Preface	xi
Céline PAGANELLI!
Introduction	xiii
Céline PAGANELLI!
Chapter 1. Information Sources on Childhood Immunization	1
Mylène COSTES!
1.1. Introduction	1
1.2. Methodology	3
1.3. Vaccination: a proven trust	4
1.3.1. Loss of trust in the vaccination act	4
1.3.2. The vaccination obligation	5
1.4. Health and legitimacy information retrieval: an ambivalent stance	6
1.4.1. Health information research practices	6
1.4.2. Criteria for the legitimacy of online medical information	8
1.5. Parents' knowledge of vaccination	10
1.5.1. Lack of knowledge and limited use of the available information	10
1.5.2. Few parents seek information on vaccination	12
1.6. The opinion of the health professional: a forced trust?	13
1.6.1. A discourse that can change the perception of the vaccination act	13
1.6.2. Maintained trust for health professionals	14
1.7. Conclusion	15
1.8. References	17

Chapter 2. Web 2.0, Parenting and Informational Habitus	21
Maryline VIVION!
2.1. Vaccine hesitancy: a manifestation of parental approach	21
2.2. Methodology	24
2.3. Results.	26
2.3.1. Diversified information practices	26
2.3.2. The Internet and the importance of choice	28
2.3.3. Mechanisms for determining information credibility	30
2.4. Information reflexivity	33
2.5. Conclusion	35
2.6. References	37
Chapter 3. Trust, Information Sources and the Impact on Decision-Making: The Example of Vaccination	43
Ève DUBÉ and Dominique GAGNON!
3.1. Introduction.	43
3.2. Vaccination: a complex decision influenced by trust	44
3.3. Vaccine hesitancy and trust toward information	46
3.3.1. Quebec parents' trust in the information provided about their children's vaccination	47
3.4. Media, information and vaccine hesitancy	49
3.4.1. Media and media controversies surrounding vaccination	49
3.4.2. Media controversy surrounding human papillomavirus vaccination in Quebec	49
3.4.3. Vaccination information research: impact on vaccine decision-making	51
3.5. Challenges and issues of public health communication to increase vaccine coverage	52
3.6. Conclusion	54
3.7. References	55
Chapter 4. Info-Communication Practices of Autistic Children's Parents on the Internet: Trust Issues and Legitimacy	67
Clément DUSSARPS and Denis DUSSARPS!
4.1. Introduction.	67
4.2. Search for health information on the Internet: questioning the medical authority?	68
4.3. Trust and legitimacy: at the heart of the patient's "actorization"	70

4.4. The trust crisis concerning autism	71
4.5. Methodological elements	73
4.6. Sample presentation and statistical limits	74
4.7. The trust crisis in autism: empirical evidence	75
4.8. Habits in information retrieval on autism	79
4.9. Parents' motivations to go on the Internet and compensation research because of a lack of medical info-communication	80
4.10. Conclusion: overview and perspectives	83
4.11. References	84
Chapter 5. Trust and Information Behavior of French Air Force Flight Nurses	87
Anna LEZON RIVIÈRE and Madjid IHADJADENE!
5.1. Introduction	87
5.2. Information behavior and situation awareness	88
5.3. Group of actors and study methodology	92
5.4. Analysis of the empirical study's results	93
5.4.1. Building trusting relationships	93
5.4.2. Trust and roles/structure as information sources	95
5.4.3. Trust and communication	96
5.4.4. Trust and skills/knowledge/experience	98
5.4.5. Trust and control	100
5.5. Discussion and conclusion	100
5.6. References	103
Chapter 6. Online Info-Communication Practices in the Face of a Crisis of Trust in Breast Cancer Prevention	107
Pierre MIGNOT and Dorsaf OMRANE!
6.1. Introduction	107
6.2. Breast cancer prevention: a strategic uncertainty?	109
6.2.1. Public health communication: toward a culture of prevention?	110
6.2.2. Breast cancer preventions in question: measures and actors	112
6.3. Online info-communication practices of the population concerned by breast cancer prevention	117
6.3.1. Methodological choices for the analysis of an online exchange area	118
6.3.2. Two trust measures: between judgment and promises	120
6.4. Discussion and conclusion	128
6.5. References	129

Chapter 7. Trust between Constraints and Limitations of Information Behaviors Among Public Health Policy Actors: The Case of Music Therapy	135
Nathalie VERDIER!
7.1. Introduction.	135
7.2. Context of emergence of the question of trust: the case of music therapy.	136
7.3. Research field	138
7.4. Devices to observe.	140
7.5. Methodology	141
7.6. Trust apprehended through the digital document.	142
7.7. Trust apprehended via institutional sites	147
7.8. Trust apprehended through digital devices	148
7.9. Conclusion	152
7.10. Annex	153
7.10.1. Parliamentary documents	153
7.10.2. Documents distributed by the HAS	153
7.10.3. Attribution documents created using screenshots from institutional website pages via the following links	154
7.11. References.	154
Chapter 8. Hospital Trust and Legitimacy: Internal Medicine in the French Health Care System	159
Paméla BAILLETTE and Michel MANNARINI!
8.1. Introduction.	159
8.2. The interface-actor as a transversal integrator	160
8.2.1. Presentation of the interface-actor	160
8.2.2. Interface-actor missions	162
8.3. Internal medicine at the interface of hospital services	165
8.3.1. Internal medicine and the role of the internist	165
8.3.2. Readability and notoriety of internal medicine	168
8.3.3. Evolution of internal medicine	171
8.4. Conclusion	172
8.5. References	173

Chapter 9. From Health Actors' Information-Communication Issues in the Workplace to Obstacles when Establishing a Relationship of Trust	177
Aurélia DUMAS!
9.1. Introduction.	177
9.2. Building the company's legitimacy in occupational health safety	179
9.2.1. The employer's obligations	179
9.2.2. Biopolitical perspective and company's legitimacy.	180
9.2.3. Health actors: health information and communication producers within the company	182
9.3. Info-communication issues of health actors within the company	183
9.3.1. Between distance and alignment regarding institutional communication	183
9.3.2. The lack of visibility and burden of health actors	185
9.4. The company and its communication policies: obstacles to establishing a relationship of trust.	186
9.4.1. Primacy of control logic and employee concealment strategies.	186
9.4.2. The difficulty of talking for employees	187
9.5. Conclusion	188
9.6. References	190
Chapter 10. Connected Health: Between Common Aspirations and Specific Interests	195
Adrian STAI!
10.1. Introduction: connected health, a notion in search of a referent	195
10.2. Multiple paths of a historical disempowerment of health	198
10.3. New economic configurations of connected health.	202
10.4. Conclusion: trust, an ever-new challenge	214
10.5. References.	218
Chapter 11. Expressions of Trust in the Home-Based Care Relationship and Areas of Legitimacy in the Context of Digital Media	223
Géraldine GOULINET-FITÉ and Didier PAQUELIN!
11.1. Introduction	223
11.2. Care: a relationship between actors	224

11.2.1. Structure of treatment: logics forged concerning epistemological foundations between cure and care	225
11.2.2. Interactional dimensions and functions of the care relationship	228
11.3. Dynamic of building trust in the home-based care relationship.	231
11.3.1. Trust in the doctor-patient relationship: a notion rooted in privacy	234
11.3.2. Trust in the caregiver-patient relationship: a pattern shaped by esteem.	234
11.3.3. Trust in the helping-patient relationship: a domestic commitment of proximity	235
11.4. Digital mediatization of the relationship based on the care device.	238
11.4.1. Singularity of media coverage of the relationship with ICT	239
11.4.2. Singularity of media coverage of care with ICT	240
11.4.3. Trust climate in the context of digital media	241
11.5. Forecast and conclusion.	243
11.6. References.	245
Chapter 12. The Electronic Medical Record: Standardization Issues and Personalization of Information for Health Professionals	251
David MORQUIN and Roxana OLOGEANU-TADDEI!
12.1. Introduction to EMRs	251
12.2. Literature review	253
12.3. Exploratory empirical study	256
12.3.1. Study context	256
12.3.2. Methodology	258
12.4. Discussion and conclusion	265
12.5. References.	267
Postface	273
Viviane COUZINET
List of Authors	275
Index	277