
Contents

Introduction	ix
Chapter 1. Technological Surveillance Subjected to Restrictions	1
1.1. A test based on data collection techniques	2
1.2. Information technology understood as a technique for control	5
1.2.1. The creation of the first data banks in the United States.	5
1.2.2. Personal file network project in France	8
1.3. Formalizing the right to personal privacy	10
1.3.1. An elaborated definition of personal privacy	11
1.3.2. The impact of defending personal privacy.	14
1.4. Useful regulations with a limited efficacy	16
Chapter 2. Security Over Liberty	21
2.1. The constant instability of security and liberty	22
2.1.1. Regulation of police files disturbed by a security measure	22
2.1.2. Establishment of new surveillance technologies	25
2.2. A state of global surveillance.	28
2.2.1. The establishment of a network of interception of global communications dating from the Cold War	29

2.2.2. Global surveillance in a newly formed technological world	32
2.3. Changing American security	35
2.3.1. Orders of an imperial state	35
2.3.2. A new control structure in France	37
Chapter 3. A Network Promoting Participation and Exchange.	41
3.1. A liberalizing view on laptop and computer networking	41
3.1.1. The crucial part played by Californian counterculture	41
3.1.2. An unlimited network is formed in America	46
3.2. Uses of the Internet for citizens	49
3.2.1. Hopes for democratic renovation often thwarted	49
3.2.2. A case of extending public space for expression and mobilization	51
3.3. Facilitation of freedom of expression and communication	56
3.3.1. The success of an expressive and interpersonal Web	56
3.3.2. A problematic space through which to communicate	61
Chapter 4. Privatization and Economic Exploitation of Personal Data	65
4.1. Private appropriation of personal data converted for economic benefit	65
4.1.1. Monopolizing devices	65
4.1.2. Algorithmic data recovery	69
4.1.3. Turning money into data	73
4.2. Questioning of public/private hierarchies by unprecedented monopolies	77
4.2.1. Effects of the network	77
4.2.2. The State as a hindrance	80

Chapter 5. Digitalization and Revolution	87
5.1. The digital revolution as the new Industrial Revolution . .	88
5.1.1. Placing the revolution in history	88
5.1.2. Independent, powerful and positive social transformation.	91
5.1.3. Regulating an ambivalent industrial revolution.	93
5.2. The digital revolution as the foundation for a libertarian political revolution.	96
5.3. Another idea of the revolution in which digitalization is not the first priority	100
Bibliography	107
Index	117