
Contents

Preface	ix
Introduction	xiii
Part 1. Epistemological Foundations	1
Introduction to Part 1	3
Chapter 1. Political Power, Institutions and Socio-economic Organizations	5
1.1. Explanations of the emergence of political power	5
1.2. The State, the achieved form of political power	6
1.3. The State as outdated form of political power: the new social powers	10
1.3.1. The relationships between economic power and political power	10
1.3.2. Displacement of the capacity for action from the State to multinational corporations?	12
1.3.3. Technological proliferation and organizational mutations: the emergence of new powers?	13
1.3.4. The emergence of a fourth power through the development of new collective, discursive and decisional spaces: the media?	17
Chapter 2. Subjective and Intersubjective Power	21
2.1. The concept of relational power, a concept of subject or subjects?	21
2.2. Interactions, translations and exchanges: locations, situations and manifestations of relational power	24
2.3. A desirous subject driving a relational power.	28

Chapter 3. Discursive Power: Words, Languages, Controls and Arguments	35
3.1. The active power of language in and of itself.	35
3.1.1. The efficacy of words	36
3.1.2. Terminological mastery and the power of knowledge	37
3.2. The power of language in operation	39
3.2.1. Performative speech acts?	39
3.2.2. The construction of discourse within rhetoric	41
3.3. The predominance of social frameworks in the exercise of linguistic power	43
3.3.1. The control of language and the resulting conflict	43
3.3.2. Linguistic competence, an instrument of social reproduction	45
3.4. The symbolic and analogic power of language: acting on the imagination, feelings and desire	47
Part 2. Mobilizing the Concept of Power in ICS.	53
Introduction to Part 2.	55
Chapter 4. Linguistic Power in ICS	57
4.1. Authority figures.	58
4.1.1. The genesis of the concept of the figure	58
4.1.2. The power of the authority figure	58
4.2. The circulation of epic stories and the instrumentalization of metaphors	63
4.2.1. Stories and the construction of representations	63
4.2.2. Metaphors, invocation, and naturalization	66
4.3. The stimulation of desire, the manipulation of self-esteem, and the instrumentalization of identities.	67
4.3.1. Individual identity: recognition and instrumentalization of the relation to the self.	68
4.3.2. Collective identity: the manipulation of the desire to belong	72
4.4. The concealment or even prohibition of alternative language	75
4.4.1. The dominance of authorized language	75
4.4.2. Naturalization and unthought	80
4.4.3. The control of discursive spaces	81
4.5. The fields and spaces for the exercise of communicational influence.	83
4.5.1. The marketing approach in light of the “publicness” principle	84
4.5.2. The manipulation and influence of actors in organizations	90

Chapter 5. Power, Society, and Developments in ICT	99
5.1. The emergence of the “information society”	100
5.1.1. Are digital technologies the foundation for the construction of the information society?	101
5.1.2. The exercise of the discursive power connected to the expression “information society”	105
5.2. Reinforcement of established power and social control or relocation of power?	107
5.2.1. New potential for control	108
5.2.2. A new space for counter-power?	109
5.2.3. Reinforcement of established power or new ways of exercising power?	114
5.2.4. Conclusion: a digital society of control?	118
5.3. The rationalization of information and communication, a contemporary expression of power?	119
5.3.1. Emergence and instrumentalization of the symbolic aspects of communication.	120
5.3.2. Are normalizations and cognitive rationalization more effective than symbolic rationalization?	124
 Chapter 6. Media Power	 129
6.1. Extensions of the debate: does media power have powerful effects or limited effects?	131
6.1.1. Autonomous receivers/passive receivers	131
6.1.2. Influence rather than media power.	133
6.1.3. Media: the strength of counter-power?	134
6.1.4. A relational rather than a political power	136
6.2. The power of journalists?	138
6.2.1. The key position of journalist(s)	138
6.2.2. Journalists caught up in power relations	141
6.2.3. A systemic power imposed on journalists?	144
6.3. The media: between symbolic, political, and economic powers	145
6.3.1. The way the media distributes and favors certain representations.	145
6.3.2. Concentration and economic power as an explanation of sociopolitical actions by the media	148
6.3.3. New media: new forms of power.	151
6.4. The power of the image and the power of image distribution media	153
6.4.1. The relationship between text and image	154
6.4.2. The inherent power of the image	157
6.4.3. The social power and counter-power of images	161

Conclusion	163
References	165
Index of Names	185
Index of Notions	191