

---

Contents

---

Introduction . . . . .	xiii
Thierry DELÉCOLLE, Florence JACOB and Isabelle PRIM-ALLAZ
Chapter 1. How Can Customer Relations and Sufficiency Be Reconciled? A Reflection on the Consumption of Second-hand Goods . . . . .	1
Valérie GUILLARD
1.1. Customer relations and sufficient living: what conflicts? . . . . .	3
1.1.1. Relationship marketing: spirit and tools . . . . .	3
1.1.2. Sufficient lifestyle: characteristics, dimensions and links with the second-hand market . . . . .	4
1.2. Customer relations and the second-hand market . . . . .	6
1.2.1. The second-hand market: a brief overview in 2022 . . . . .	6
1.2.2. Perception of customer relations in the second-hand market . . . . .	8
1.3. Conclusion . . . . .	11
1.4. References . . . . .	12
Chapter 2. Customer Relationships and Sustainable Development in the Retail Sector . . . . .	15
Sarah LASRI, Lionel NICOD and Valérie RENAUDIN
2.1. Incompatibility between retail and sustainable development? A few paradoxes to overcome . . . . .	16
2.1.1. The hyperchoice model versus the expectation of greater sufficiency . . . . .	17
2.1.2. Selling ever-greener, ever-cheaper products . . . . .	18

2.1.3. Enhancing the customer experience while reducing energy waste . . . . .	19
2.2. Customers and employees: accelerating sustainable development in the retail sector? . . . . .	20
2.2.1. The customer's voice: a gateway to new models? . . . . .	21
2.2.2. The voice of employees: a driving force in the transition of retailers . . . . .	23
2.3. Conclusion . . . . .	24
2.4. References . . . . .	25
Chapter 3. Corporate Social Responsibility and Loyalty . . . . .	27
Didier LOUIS, Cindy LOMBART and Nathalie FLECK
3.1. Definitions of perceived CSR and loyalty . . . . .	28
3.1.1. Perceived CSR . . . . .	28
3.1.2. Loyalty . . . . .	29
3.2. The influence of perceived CSR on consumers' retailer loyalty . . . . .	29
3.2.1. The impact of perceived CSR as a global construct on retailer loyalty . . . . .	30
3.2.2. A different impact depending on CSR dimensions and consumer profiles . . . . .	31
3.3. Examples of concrete actions (in line with respect for the environment and philanthropic activities). . . . .	33
3.3.1. The influence of a retailer's bulk product offer on consumer loyalty to that retailer . . . . .	33
3.3.2. Sponsorship, cause-related marketing and CSR-linked sponsorship: three CSR actions to build consumer loyalty . . . . .	35
3.4. Conclusion . . . . .	36
3.5. References . . . . .	37
Chapter 4. Reinventing Loyalty Programs in the CSR Age: Moving toward Prosocial Loyalty Programs. . . . .	41
Loubaba BELAOU, Aïda MIMOUNI-CHAABANE and Béatrice PARGUEL
4.1. Limits of the traditional loyalty program in the CSR era . . . . .	42
4.1.1. A philosophy focused on purchasing behavior. . . . .	42
4.1.2. A design that conceals environmental and social impact. . . . .	43
4.2. The academic literature: loyalty program responsibility . . . . .	44
4.3. Benchmark study: loyalty programs . . . . .	46
4.4. Interviews with loyalty experts . . . . .	49
4.4.1. Corroboration of the literature and benchmark findings . . . . .	49
4.4.2. New findings from interviews . . . . .	50

4.5. Toward a prosocial loyalty program . . . . .	52
4.6. References . . . . .	54
Chapter 5. Toward Greater Sufficiency in Customer Relationships . . . . .	57
Jean-Baptiste WELTÉ, Virginie PEZ and Isabelle DABADIE
5.1. The systemic collapse of consumerism . . . . .	58
5.1.1. The impact of marketing and customer relationship practices on the ecosystem: the anthropogenic footprint . . . . .	58
5.1.2. The impact of new technologies and digital transformation on social ties: accelerating a process of disintegration . . . . .	60
5.1.3. Consumption and rebound effect. . . . .	62
5.2. For more sufficiency in customer relationships. . . . .	63
5.2.1. Sufficiency in customer relationships: doing “less” but “better” . . . . .	63
5.2.2. Enhancing the status of customers that practice “sufficiency” . . . . .	64
5.2.3. Promoting sufficiency through customer relationships . . . . .	65
5.2.4. Facilitating commitment to sufficiency through customer relationships. . . . .	66
5.3. Conclusion . . . . .	68
5.4. References . . . . .	68
Chapter 6. Metaverse Opportunities for Customer Relations . . . . .	71
Catherine LEJEALLE and Thierry DELÉCOLLE
6.1. An immersive, interactive and persistent universe . . . . .	73
6.2. A gamified, esthetic universe . . . . .	74
6.3. A personalized world of scarcity . . . . .	75
6.4. A social and community universe. . . . .	76
6.5. An innovative universe . . . . .	76
6.6. Conclusion . . . . .	77
6.7. References . . . . .	79
Chapter 7. Towards Transparent and Parsimonious Customer Data Collection . . . . .	81
Tom VILLENET, Thierry DELÉCOLLE and Grégoire BOTHOREL
7.1. Data as a means of personalizing customer relations and creating a competitive advantage . . . . .	83
7.1.1. Risks in terms of breaches of privacy for the consumer . . . . .	84
7.1.2. Risks in terms of strategic dependencies for companies . . . . .	86

7.2. The new connected consumers and their multiple perceptions of different data collection methods . . . . .	87
7.3. Why authorize the collection and use of personal data? . . . . .	88
7.4. How can we encourage parsimonious data collection? . . . . .	90
7.4.1. Minimizing data collection . . . . .	91
7.4.2. Relying on transparency when collecting data . . . . .	93
7.4.3. Giving consumers control . . . . .	95
7.5. Conclusion: finally, what is the value of data? . . . . .	96
7.6. References . . . . .	97
Chapter 8. From Persuasion to Customer Manipulation: The Role of Dark Patterns . . . . .	99
Florence JACOB, Jeffrey DROUARD, Séverine ERHEL, Marianne LUMEAU and Raphaël SUIRE
8.1. Dark pattern definitions and typologies . . . . .	100
8.2. Marketing as usual? . . . . .	104
8.3. Problematic Internet use due to dark patterns? . . . . .	107
8.4. Impossible to observe and yet combatable . . . . .	108
8.5. Appendix . . . . .	111
8.6. References . . . . .	111
Chapter 9. Digital Consumption and Inclusion . . . . .	115
Léa CAUCHARD
9.1. Introduction: when the digitalization of customer journeys raises challenges . . . . .	115
9.2. Consequences of the digitization of customer journeys . . . . .	116
9.2.1. A transformation of the user's role during the journey . . . . .	116
9.2.2. Interaction at the heart of the value creation process . . . . .	117
9.2.3. User participation . . . . .	117
9.2.4. A complex user experience . . . . .	118
9.3. New managerial challenges arising from the digitization of journeys . . . . .	119
9.3.1. Improving users' relationships with digital technology . . . . .	119
9.3.2. Still insufficient digital inclusion initiatives . . . . .	119
9.3.3. Moving beyond a focus on digital uses . . . . .	121
9.4. Defining the digital inclusion process . . . . .	122
9.4.1. The role of perceptions in the inclusion process . . . . .	122
9.4.2. Adopting a two-level approach to the digital inclusion process . . . . .	122

9.4.3. From inclusion to digital inclusion as perceived by the user . . . .	125
9.5. Conclusion: toward digital consumption for all . . . . .	126
9.6. References . . . . .	128

Chapter 10. Improving Effective Accessibility of Products and Services for Vulnerable Customers . . . . . 131

Pierre VOLLE and Sylvie LLOSA

10.1. Effective accessibility of products and services, a challenge for organizations. . . . .	132
10.1.1. Definition of effective accessibility . . . . .	132
10.1.2. Effective accessibility: a challenge for organizations? . . . . .	133
10.2. The challenges of effective accessibility for vulnerable customers . .	134
10.2.1. How do you define a vulnerable customer?. . . . .	134
10.2.2. Reduced effective accessibility for vulnerable customers?. . . . .	135
10.3. Ways to improve the effective accessibility of products and services for vulnerable customers . . . . .	136
10.3.1. How should we respond to the challenge of effective accessibility for vulnerable customers?. . . . .	137
10.3.2. How can we rethink journeys to improve accessibility for vulnerable customers?. . . . .	137
10.4. Conclusion . . . . .	141
10.5. References. . . . .	142

Chapter 11. The Patient Experience . . . . . 145

Stéphanie VERFAY

11.1. From the health service to the patient experience. . . . .	146
11.1.1. Patient satisfaction as a starting point . . . . .	146
11.1.2. The patient from an experiential perspective . . . . .	147
11.1.3. Designing a meaningful experience . . . . .	148
11.2. Enhancing the value of the patient experience . . . . .	149
11.2.1. The perceived value of the patient experience . . . . .	149
11.2.2. A typology of the value of the patient experience . . . . .	150
11.2.3. Experience value as a lever for appropriation of the patient experience . . . . .	152
11.3. Conclusion . . . . .	153
11.4. References. . . . .	155

Chapter 12. Adopting Ethical Sales Behavior . . . . . 157

Eric JULIENNE

12.1. Unethical temptation among salespeople. . . . .	157
12.1.1. Salespeople’s ethical dilemmas . . . . .	158
12.1.2. The six principles of influence according to Cialdini . . . . .	159
12.1.3. Influence or manipulation: what are the differences? . . . . .	161
12.2. Creating ethical behavior . . . . .	162
12.2.1. Customer orientation at the heart of sales ethics . . . . .	162
12.2.2. How can the ethical behavior of salespeople be developed? . . . . .	164
12.2.3. Ethics and business performance: how compatible are they? . . . . .	165
12.3. Conclusion . . . . .	167
12.4. References. . . . .	168

Chapter 13. Customer Relationships as a Factor of Resistance: The Case of Smart Feedback Tools . . . . . 171

Françoise SIMON and Virginie SCHWEITZER

13.1. The rise of smart feedback tools . . . . .	172
13.1.1. Definition of smart feedback tools . . . . .	172
13.1.2. Deployment dynamics by sector . . . . .	173
13.1.3. The collection of multiple types of private data . . . . .	175
13.1.4. Toward a classification based on the nature of feedback . . . . .	175
13.2. A brand relationship investment . . . . .	176
13.2.1. Relational investments supporting customer relationships . . . . .	176
13.2.2. Smart feedback tools as a promise of empowerment . . . . .	177
13.3. Consumer resistance to smart feedback tools . . . . .	178
13.3.1. Multiple sources of disempowerment . . . . .	178
13.3.2. Forms of resistance . . . . .	180
13.4. Conclusion . . . . .	180
13.5. References. . . . .	181

Chapter 14. Customer Relations in the Social and Solidarity Economy . . . . . 183

Hajar EL KARMOUNI and Alix POELS

14.1. Managing customer relations in social and solidarity economy organizations. . . . .	183
14.1.1. Democratic governance of SSE organizations and customer relations . . . . .	184
14.2. CRM in consumer cooperatives: the case of La Louve . . . . .	185
14.2.1. The cooperative: definition and articles of association . . . . .	185

14.2.2. La Louve cooperative supermarket. . . . .	187
14.2.3. Taking on the intra-role: from consumer to cooperator through work . . . . .	188
14.2.4. Between customers and cooperative status . . . . .	189
14.3. Organizing customer relations in a collective interest cooperative company: the case of Enercoop Languedoc-Roussillon . . . . .	190
14.3.1. The collective interest cooperative company: definition and articles of association . . . . .	190
14.3.2. The SCIC Enercoop Languedoc-Roussillon . . . . .	190
14.3.3. A commitment that translates into extra-roles conditioned by the organization's economic times. . . . .	191
14.4. Conclusion . . . . .	193
14.5. References. . . . .	194

Chapter 15. Purpose Corporations and Customer Strategy:
Toward a Strategy of Customer Education and Empowerment? . . . 197

Isabelle PRIM-ALLAZ and Martine SÉVILLE

15.1. Purpose corporations: a response to customers' expectations of "responsible" capitalism . . . . .	197
15.1.1. Customer demand for "enhanced" corporate social responsibility . . . . .	197
15.1.2. Companies with a mission to meet customer expectations? . . . .	198
15.2. The "customer loyalty paradox" in purpose corporations . . . . .	202
15.2.1. The transition to a purpose corporation: a challenge for customer relations . . . . .	203
15.2.2. The transition to a purpose corporation: a tool for winning and building loyalty . . . . .	205
15.3. Toward a new relationship marketing strategy . . . . .	206
15.3.1. Purpose corporations: (re)thinking customer relations . . . . .	206
15.3.2. A renewed promotion and justification strategy around the raisons d'être of purpose corporations . . . . .	207
15.3.3. Customer awareness and education: a renewed corporate branding strategy . . . . .	209
15.3.4. A customer education strategy for mutual learning and commitment to the mission . . . . .	209
15.3.5. Helping customers transform . . . . .	210
15.3.6. Encouraging customer involvement in defining and carrying out the company's mission . . . . .	211
15.4. References. . . . .	213

Chapter 16. Complex Customer Experience Management with Multi-stakeholders . . . . .	215
Amélie MARTIN
16.1. From customer experience to its management . . . . .	216
16.1.1. The origins of the customer experience . . . . .	217
16.1.2. A first approach to customer experience management . . . . .	217
16.1.3. The customer journey approach and value co-creation . . . . .	218
16.2. Integrating stakeholders in customer experience management . . . . .	219
16.2.1. Moving beyond customer-centric experience management . . . . .	219
16.2.2. Toward customer experience management focused on stakeholders . . . . .	219
16.3. Using value propositions to align stakeholders . . . . .	221
16.3.1. The need to align stakeholders . . . . .	221
16.3.2. Value propositions as a tool for stakeholder alignment . . . . .	221
16.4. Conclusion . . . . .	225
16.5. References. . . . .	226
 List of Authors . . . . .	 229
 Index . . . . .	 233