
Contents

Introduction	ix
Part 1. The Intellectual Movement of the Cultural Commons	1
Introduction to Part 1	3
Chapter 1. The Pioneering Approach of Jurists from the Berkman Center for Internet and Society	7
1.1. A critique of the maximalist doctrine of intellectual property	7
1.1.1. The enclosure of the intangible commons of the mind	9
1.1.2. The threat of disappearance of free culture in cyberspace	12
1.2. The political economy of information commons	17
1.2.1. Shared ownership and individual freedom	18
1.2.2. A new mode of information production	22
1.3. The creative commons in the field of works of the mind	28
1.3.1. Incarnation of free culture practices	28
1.3.2. Institutionalization of free culture: Creative Commons licenses	31
1.3.3. The modalities of cohabitation with the commercial cultural economy	34
1.4. Propagation in the intellectual and militant sphere in France	42
1.4.1. The challenge of legalizing non-market sharing	43
1.4.2. The challenge of legal recognition of the information commons	49
1.5. Recent extensions of the BCIS approach	54
1.5.1. The digital public domain: the perimeter of cultural commons	55
1.5.2. Network infrastructure as a commons	60
1.5.3. Remuneration of volunteer contributors	63

Chapter 2. The Ostromian Approach to the Knowledge Commons	69
2.1. Ostrom’s original theory of the land commons	71
2.1.1. An institutional definition of the commons	71
2.1.2. A questioning of the “tragedy of the commons”	72
2.1.3. Communal property as a bundle of rights	75
2.1.4. An institutional approach to the self-organization of common resources	78
2.2. The knowledge commons: Hess and Ostrom’s approach	80
2.2.1. The singularity of information common pool resources (CPR)	80
2.2.2. Digital libraries as information CPRs	84
2.2.3. Institutional analysis and development framework (IAD)	87
2.3. Open access platforms as scientific commons?	90
2.3.1. Open access: a major transformation of the editorial ecosystem	91
2.3.2. Open access platforms: which bundles of user rights?	99
2.3.3. Enrichment and sustainability of the scientific commons	107
2.4. Cooperative platforms as social commons?	118
2.4.1. A rapprochement with the social and solidarity economy	118
2.4.2. Conditions for exploiting the social value created	122
2.4.3. Governance of cooperative platforms	126
2.4.4. Commoners’ remuneration: a right to contribute	133
Part 2. The Commons in the Digital Book Ecosystem	137
Introduction to Part 2	139
Chapter 3. Digital Libraries as Heritage Commons	141
3.1. A favorable context	142
3.1.1. A new documentary order	142
3.1.2. Cultural public data as a public good	144
3.2. The production methods of heritage commons	149
3.2.1. The Google challenge	149
3.2.2. Public/private partnerships: threat or opportunity?	152
3.2.3. On-demand digitization and citizen contribution	156
3.2.4. The heritage commons: a plasticity of forms	157
3.3. Governance issue: enriching our common heritage	161
3.3.1. The construction of a shared heritage infrastructure	161
3.3.2. Content editorialization and digital mediation	164

Chapter 4. The Written Commons in the Publishing Industry	169
4.1. The transformations of the editorial ecosystem.	170
4.1.1. Digital textuality and new uses	170
4.1.2. The digital book immersed in an attention economy	172
4.1.3. The digital book and the growth of self-publishing	176
4.2. Wattpad: a common narrative of the misguided written word	178
4.2.1. The use of CC licenses: a hidden reality	179
4.2.2. A progressive attraction to the attention economy	180
4.2.3. Strengthened cohabitation with publishers: the announced end of free culture	182
4.3. Self-publishing and free culture: a multifaceted face	184
4.3.1. The Lulu platform: open source for the book market?	184
4.3.2. In Libro Veritas and Framabook: free book editions	187
Conclusion	193
References	199
Index	207