
Contents

Foreword	xi
Nathalie PINÈDE
Introduction	xvii
Julien ATCHOUA, Jean-Jacques BOGUI and Saikou DIALLO
Part 1. Social Media and the Public Space in Africa	1
Chapter 1. Civil Society in the Consolidation Process of Democracy in Burkina Faso: Balai Citoyen on Facebook	3
Marcel BAGARÉ
1.1. Problems	5
1.2. Theoretical and methodological approach	6
1.3. Good governance, the purpose of Balai Citoyen	8
1.4. The media construction of Balai Citoyen/via/Facebook: images and propaganda	10
1.5. Leadership: a factor of mobilization/via social networks	14
1.6. Facebook and Balai Citoyen: an instrument of conquest and political struggle?	17
1.7. Conclusion	20
1.8. References	21

Chapter 2. Social Networks, New Barometers of Political Action in Côte d'Ivoire	25
Raymond Kouassi KRA
2.1. Positioning of the problem	25
2.2. Social networks and the question of their importance in the world, in Africa and in Côte d'Ivoire.	27
2.3. Some message content broadcast on digital social networks	30
2.4. Mobilization and process implemented: a need for freedom met by the Internet	32
2.5. The real impact of mobilization on political action	33
2.6. Mobilization and messages	35
2.7. Social networks, political actors and the exercise of power in Côte d'Ivoire.	37
2.8. Conclusion	40
2.9. References	40
 Chapter 3. Mobilization for Collective Action: The Contribution of Digital Social Networks to Political Engagement	 43
Gbati NAPO
3.1. State of play and theoretical framework	46
3.1.1. Digital social networks (DSNs): current situation.	46
3.1.2. Theoretical positioning of research	47
3.2. Research results	48
3.2.1. Types and processes of collective action: the different types	48
3.2.2. Collective action process	49
3.2.3. Actions for collective mobilization: from the use of traditional media to digital social media	50
3.2.4. Broadening public debate on DSNs and mobilizing for socio-political demands	51
3.2.5. DSNs and broadening public debate in a context of democratic renewal.	51
3.2.6. DSNs and mobilization for political participation: elections	53
3.2.7. DSNs and collective actions: examples of political engagement in Africa	54
3.3. Discussion	57
3.4. Conclusion	59
3.5. References	60
3.6. Webography	61

Chapter 4. Social Media Challenges in Citizen Participation in Africa	63
Oulaï Honoré KAH
4.1. Theoretical context	64
4.1.1. Social media	64
4.1.2. Overview of the characteristics of the social web and social media	65
4.2. Digital public space	66
4.3. Citizen participation	67
4.3.1. Overview of citizen participation	67
4.3.2. Use of citizen blogs	69
4.4. Methodology	69
4.5. Main practical challenges	71
4.5.1. Communication challenges	71
4.5.2. Political challenges	74
4.5.3. Social challenges	76
4.5.4. Technical challenges	78
4.6. Conclusion	79
4.7. Appendix	80
4.8. References	82
Chapter 5. Medialism in the Societal Space of John Updike	85
Olivier Koffi KOFFI
5.1. A chorus of media voices	86
5.1.1. The voice of the radio: give-and-take	88
5.1.2. The voice of the telephone: a telephone narrative	88
5.1.3. The voice of television: literature on screen	91
5.2. A media description of fragmentation in social mediation	92
5.2.1. Work on the page	95
5.2.2. Media and cultural transfers	100
5.3. Conclusion	103
5.4. References	104
Part 2. Issues Linked to the Digital Economy in Africa	107
Chapter 6. “Je suis au bara” or the Deviant Use of the Internet among Abidjan’s Scammers	109
Ettien Franck Stéphane ADOU and Mahesse Stéphanie KOLÉ
6.1. Materials and methods	111
6.2. From the robot launcher to scamming master: routes and upward mobility of the scammer	112

6.2.1. Access logic and scamming transmission mode	112
6.2.2. Phases, success models and rewards of the scamming career	113
6.3. The scamming practice	116
6.3.1. Being in the bara: a typical day at the Internet café	116
6.3.2. Processes mobilized within bara: between psychology, technology and mysticism	117
6.4. The dynamic identity of scammers	119
6.4.1. Reflective identity (self-image and practice)	120
6.4.2. The scammers and their entourage	121
6.5. Discussion: scamming, a persistent deviant profession	122
6.6. Conclusion	124
6.7. References	125
Chapter 7. Money Transfers via Mobile Phones and Contributions to the Socio-Economic Well-Being of Populations in Africa	127
Évariste DAKOURÉ
7.1. Methodology	130
7.2. The notion of financial inclusion and mobile money	131
7.3. Mobile phone penetration rate in Africa and mobile money transfer	132
7.4. Factors promoting the development of money transfers/via mobile phones	134
7.5. Presentation of the results	136
7.5.1. The issue of migrant fund transfers in Western Africa	136
7.5.2. Money transfers from African migrants via mobile phones and human development in Africa	138
7.5.3. Development of money transfer services in rural areas	140
7.5.4. Mobile money transfer and inclusion in Africa	143
7.6. Conclusion	144
7.7. References	145
Chapter 8. Geographic Concentration of Monetary Activities and Spatial Dispersion induced by Digital Technology in Côte d'Ivoire	149
Alain François LOUKOU
8.1. Theoretical framework of the study: a fundamental disruption to traditional economic models, linked to the digital revolution	151
8.2. Description of the spatial framework of the study	152
8.3. Methodology	153
8.4. Results	154
8.4.1. The classic model of concentration of monetary activities in Côte d'Ivoire	154

8.4.2. The model of decentralization of monetary transaction activities, driven by the vitality of digital and electronic technology	156
8.5. The interpretation of geographical space through digital services	158
8.6. The financial inclusion of a significant proportion of the population through digital technology	159
8.7. Discussion	160
8.7.1. Limits of geographical coverage of mobile transmission networks and technical difficulties of inclusion	160
8.7.2. The mobile payment solution: advantages and disadvantages	161
8.8. Limitations of the study from a methodological point of view	161
8.9. Conclusion	162
8.10. References	163
Part 3. Digital Technologies and Human Development	167
Chapter 9. Digital Technology, “Smart City” and Video Surveillance in Côte d’Ivoire	169
Julien ATCHOUA and Jean-Jacques BOGUI
9.1. Smart city in Côte d’Ivoire: prospects	170
9.2. Video surveillance in Abidjan: state of controversy	172
9.3. Surveillance cameras between hopes and fears	174
9.4. Conclusion	177
9.5. References	179
Chapter 10. The Integration of ICT in Higher Education in Senegal	181
Ousmane SALL, Mouhamadou S. DIALLO, Insa BADJI, Moustapha CISSÉ, Abdoulaye SY and Marie NDIAYE
10.1. State of ICT in Senegal	182
10.2. Integration of ICT into education	182
10.3. E-learning in Senegal	184
10.3.1. Background information	184
10.3.2. Issues	185
10.4. E-learning initiatives in higher education institutions in Senegal	186
10.4.1. E-learning initiatives in public institutions	186
10.5. E-learning initiatives in private institutions	188
10.5.1. IAM initiatives	188
10.5.2. MIT Initiatives	188
10.6. Advantages, disadvantages and problems encountered by e-learning in Senegal	188
10.6.1. Advantages of e-learning in Senegal	189

10.6.2. Disadvantages and problems encountered by e-learning in Senegal	190
10.7. Conclusion	191
10.8. References.	192
10.9. Webography	193
Chapter 11. Connected Objects in Africa: The Case of Telemedicine with Genesis Telecare in Cameroon	195
Gilbert TOPPÉ
11.1. General information on telemedicine	196
11.2. Study of telemedicine in Africa	198
11.3. Specificity of Genesis Telecare in Cameroon	201
11.4. The Genesis Telecare approach in Cameroon	202
11.5. Telemedicine and technological innovation in Africa	204
11.6. Conclusion	207
11.7. References.	208
11.8. Webography	208
List of Authors	209
Index	211