
Contents

Introduction	ix
Chapter 1. The Republics of Letters: the Need to Communicate and Exchange	1
1.1. Republic of Letters	2
1.2. The role of journals and the beginning of scientific information.	6
Chapter 2. The Science of Writings and Documentation	13
2.1. The importance of media and technology.	15
2.2. A science of writing?	16
2.3. From biblioteconomy to bibliology	18
2.4. Between documentation and documentality	19
Chapter 3. From Lists to Tables, the Question of Indexing	23
3.1. In the beginning was the index	24
3.2. The need to handle information	28
3.3. Index and hypertext	29
3.4. Indexing as a design	30
3.5. Indexing knowledge versus indexing existences.	33

Chapter 4. The Need to Find Information	37
4.1. Information overabundance	37
4.2. The review process	40
4.3. Retrieving information	41
4.4. Between editorialization and information architecture	43
Chapter 5. The Researcher's Workstation and the History of Hypertexts	47
5.1. A hypertextual history	49
5.2. Paul Otlet and proto-digital humanities	53
5.3. The success of the Web.	59
Chapter 6. The Quantitative Leap: Social Sciences and Statistics	65
6.1. Statistical reasoning	65
6.2. A dispute over methods?	70
6.3. François Furet and history	72
6.4. Between totalitarian science and the end of science	75
6.5. Digital literacy or overcoming opposition	78
Chapter 7. Automatic Processing: Concordances, Occurrences and Other Interpretation and Visualization Matrices	81
7.1. Ostranenie.	81
7.2. Concordances.	83
7.3. Corpus creation.	88
7.4. The word association method	90
Chapter 8. Metadata Systems	93
8.1. Cataloging.	94
8.2. Markup language.	96
8.3. Folksonomies and the path of open digital humanities	98
8.4. The Web of data, from tree to graph	99

Chapter 9. The New Metrics: From Scientometrics to Webometrics	101
9.1. Bibliometrics and scientometrics.	101
9.2. The reduction of science.	103
9.3. The statistical expression of science.	105
9.4. Nalimov’s works	106
9.5. Scientometrics and traditional tools	108
Chapter 10. The Map: More than the Territory	113
10.1. Cybergeography – a forerunner of digital studies?	114
10.2. The map is not (only) the territory	117
10.3. Social networks and sociometry	118
10.4. A cartographic esthetic	120
10.5. Modeling and schematics	122
Conclusion	123
Bibliography	131
Index	147